the future for their private and public duties.

"The Commissioners have given the honorable name of one of the temporary commissioners of the District of Columbia to this building out of respect for him, and as an example to its pupils. Commissioner Blow served the District in the last year of his life, and after a successful career in business and politics. A Virginian by birth, he grew up in St. Louis and made his business success there. After serving in the State senate, as minister to Venezuela, and for two terms in Congress, he was minister to Brazil and finally commissioner of the District a typical American life of activity, usefulness, and distinction well worthy of respect and emulation."

Following Mr. Macfarland's address, Superintendent Stuart without eeremony handed the keys to the school to Miss N. V. Slater, the principal.

Superintendent Stuart and Evan H. Tucker made addresses, referring to the new school as one in which the surrounding neighborhood should take a great degree of pride.

The dedication exercises, which were late Commissioner Blow and many rep-resentatives of the citizens' associations throughout the city, closed with a song program given by the pupils of the six grades of the school.

of the six grades of the school. The Blow school is considered one of the best types of structures in the city. Similar in construction to the recently completed Ross school and the proposed buildings at the West Point Military Academy, it is a two-story and basement structure, containing eight large, well-lighted class rooms, each designated to accommodate about forty pupils.

The building with the lot cost $59,800 and is built after the plans of George O. Toppan and under the supervision of District Building Inspector Ashford.

On the farm of Mrs. Mory Johnson the cornerib was entered by the rodents, and there is little left of the crib's contents. Leonard Parvin says that rats got into his barn, devoured a greater portion of his feed and then attacked the feet of one of his horses so that blood flowed freely. William Lippincott complains that they appeared at his outbuildings by the hundreds and ate nearly all his hog and chicken feed. John Ernest says he has had a similar experience.

Men are out at night with guns and are shooting the rats by the thousands. On the farm of Mrs. Mory Johnson
